

WBPF HUNGARY OFFICIALS AT THE OLYMPICS IN LONDON

Peter and Ildiko were spectators at the Olympic Games Marathon, in front of St Paul Cathedral.

The president of WBPF Hungary, Peter Sebestyén, and the Secretary General of WBPF Europe, Ildiko Buranits received invitations to the Olympic Games in London, where besides six days of cheering on the athletes, there were wonderful opportunities to meet with fellow sports colleagues. It was at Hotel Kensington from where all sports events were easily accessible with the tube. The sports leaders of WBPF mainly visited the events in which Hungarians were also competing. Men and women handball, rowing and kayaking, 10 km women swimming, athletics, pentathlon, and basketball were also featured in their list of competitions to see. In addition to cheering on, there was even time to meet sports leaders.

The London Olympics was brilliantly organized; even London seemed cleaner for the occasion. Retired volunteers were helping the foreigners in getting around; they were greeting the spectators with smiling faces. There were mounted police, bobby's, and armed soldiers, who were ensuring safety, and there was not even a loud word around.

There was only one mistake by the Brits, they raised the prices of hotels, restaurants, and food so high, that the usual droves of tourists were missed, and you could get a table at the best restaurants without a reservation. Tiny Hungary was very successful once again; they got to 9th place on the 2012 Olympic Medal table with their 8 gold medals, and 8th place according to an all-time Olympic record, getting in front of countries with a lot bigger economical influence, and a lot more population.

Personal opinion: “For me it is completely clear, why body building will not be an Olympic sport. Not because of the suspicion of doping, since at the Olympics, one way or another, presumably everyone increases their performance with some secret wonder weapon, which does not, will not reach a desired result. The reason why not, is because the sports included at the Olympics - some, completely unnecessarily as they do not fit the spirit of the Olympics - which one's "measurement" is the consideration of physical accomplishment, according to some sort of measurement unit, based on the time, weight or technical points. In bodybuilding, this accomplishment has to be completed prior to the competition in the gym, in the diet and dewatering etc. but on stage it cannot be measured objectively in minutes, with weight or technical points. Bodybuilding is an aesthetic sport, which awakens in the average person, their own imperfection. Even though, the road that is walked through by a bodybuilder is one of the toughest that an athlete can accomplish, while stepping beyond their own borders.
